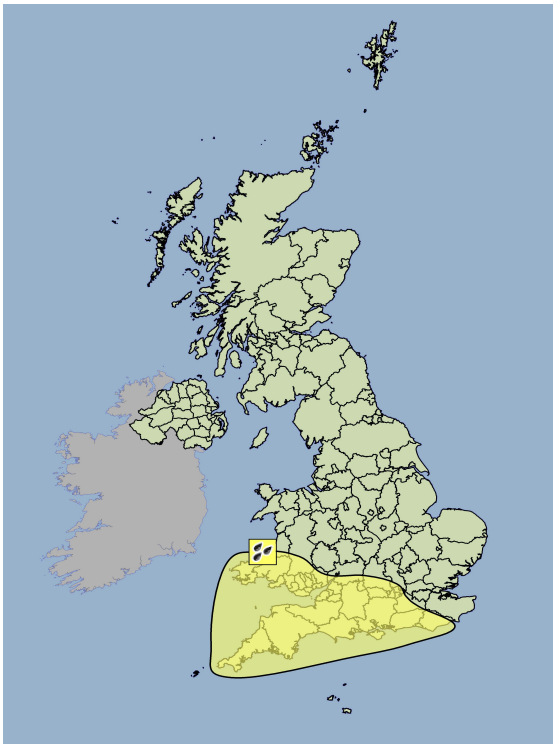
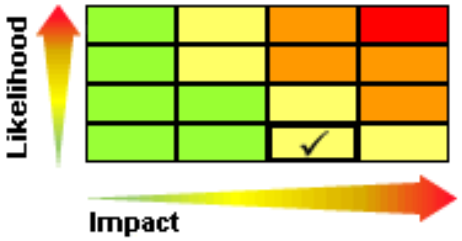
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of low pressure will move southeast across southwest England during Monday morning, then eastwards towards the Isle of Wight in the afternoon. Bands of heavy showers, some with hail and thunder will develop in the circulation of the low, leading to some locally large rainfall totals (20-30 mm), whilst other places will see relatively small amounts of rain. The air will be cold enough for rain to turn to snow over the hills of southwest England and south Wales during Monday morning with some temporary accumulations of snow possible above 300-400 metres.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 02:00 on Mon, 03rd Mar 2014 until 18:00 on Mon, 03rd Mar 2014

Heavy showers and isolated thunderstorms with hail will affect southern parts of England and Wales during Sunday night and Monday. Some of the showers will become aligned into bands producing longer spells of rain, with some snow possible over the higher ground of southwest England and south Wales.

The public should be aware of the risk of disruption to travel, primarily from localised surface water flooding.
